Bournemouth & Poole College are delighted to announce the addition of a new Level 3 course starting later this year.

Level 3 Applied Psychology, Criminology and Law is a new study programme which is equivalent to three A Levels. It's a brilliant option for any students interested in a career in criminology, law or psychology. The course will allow students to progress to university, if they wish, and offers plenty of potential career paths.

Christophe Baffos, Director of Learning for Services Industry at Bournemouth & Poole College, said: "We're really excited to be able to offer Level 3 Applied Psychology, Criminology and Law. The content of this course will allow students to explore the vast worlds of psychology, criminology and law, improving their knowledge and understanding of key approaches and theories. Through this course, students will also be able to develop their research and critical thinking skills which are vital for university study."

Applications are still open for the College's Level 3 Applied Psychology, Criminology and Law course, as well as all of the other courses and Apprenticeships available at the College.
