Levels of Apprenticeships

What you need to know about Apprenticeships

Apprenticeships are available to businesses of all sizes and sectors and can last anything from 12 months to four years.

How an Apprenticeship works

Apprentices generally do most of their learning on-the-job, working with you for a minimum of 30 hours a week.

Off-the-job training is a requirement of Apprenticeships and we can work with you to find the most flexible approach for your business. Most commonly this might be one day a week at college, but could also be block release or even training at your premises.

The new apprentice is your employee and therefore comes under your HR policies and procedures.

Today's Apprenticeships include a good grounding in the workplace. All our apprentices are expected to develop not just the skills for your industry, but also those crucial employability skills all businesses tell us are absolutely critical in good employees.

Their personal development is encouraged through independent enquiry, creative thinking, reflective learning, team working, self-management and participation.

You will have a dedicated work-based mentor to help manage the your apprentice's development.

The different levels of Apprenticeships

At The College we currently offer four types of Apprenticeships.
